His Teachings:

- Spirituality is the birthright of all and that it should be offered freely to sincere seekers everywhere.
- A true Master is the ultimate servant, and he lived his life serving all, irrespective of cast, creed, religion, gender or nationality.
- He taught that material and spiritual life should go hand in hand, like the two wings of a bird, and that the normal life of a householder is the best environment in which to learn the twin virtues of love and sacrifice.
- He identified three obstacles in the path to self-realization: i) We try but there is no attempt ii) We try too many things at the same time iii) We do not have confidence in ourselves.
- He advised his followers not to be discouraged by their faults and shortcomings, but rather to treat their weaknesses as belonging to the Master and proceed with their practice. This, he said, would contribute to steady spiritual progress.
- Of his spiritual condition he wrote, “There seems to be uniformity in love. Ties of relationship seem to have been severed. I have as much respect for my servant as for my respected father. I also consider gold and earth to be the same. I see the pious and the wicked with one eye.”
- "We have set up a tiny creation of our own, in the form of our individual material existence, having layers after layers of grossness and opacity. What is now to be done is to shatter off those layers of opacity one by one and assume the absolute state as we had at the time of creation. This is all the gist of the philosophy of our system, Sahaj Marg. We are, so to say, to dissolve this tiny creation of our making or to unfold ourselves.” (Reference : https://www.sahajmarg.org/babuji-maharaj)
